BATTLEGROUNDS OF TUNISIA ASTIR WITH CONFLICTS, UNPRECEDENTED IN FURY; ARMIES FIGHTING TOE-TO-TOE

British First Army Smashes Hard Blows at Nazis North and South of Medjez-el-Bab, Gateway to Tunis — Allied Ground Units Moving Forward

By International News Service

The ancient battlegrounds of Tunisia were astir today with conflicts of unprecedented fury as Allied and Axis armies fought toe-to-toe in the last-ditch struggle for domination of North Africa.

The combat in the French protectorate, last bridgehead of the forces of Hitler and Mussolini on the continent of Africa, developed swiftly into a general Allied offensive as two powerful British armies crashed headlong into the toughest of the enemy's defenses.

Britain's First Army smashed mighty blows at Col. Gen. Dietrich von Arnim's Nazis north and south of Medjez-el-Bab, gateway to the capital of Tunis. To the southeast the veteran Eighth Army crashed forward in repeated blows against Field Marshal Erwin Rommel's Afrika Korps entrenched in the Atlas mountains.

American and French patrols on sectors bridging the immediate battlefront stepped up their activity as the drive by Allied ground, sea and air forces to push the Germans and Italians into the sea intensified.

Gen. Kenneth A. N. Anderson, commander of the First Army, sent several spearheads into action along a nine-mile front between Goubellat and Bou Arad below Medjez-el-Bab where they were locked in battle with the Axis for control of three strategic hills separating the Allies from the coastal plain before Tunis.

The First Army column to the north moved in on the heavily fortified Axis-held long stop hill commanding the road to Tunis, 28 miles distant. This British force gained its initial objectives in a punishing drive under cover of a 400-gun artillery barrage which was preceded by a devastating aerial bombardment of the enemy's concrete defenses.

Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery, commanding the desert army which drove Rommel out of Egypt and Libya, pushed northward along the east coast.

Lewis Fails To Appear

Washington—John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, today defied the authority of the War Labor Board and refused to appear for a hearing into the union, wage controversy with soft coal operators.

A spokesman for the nine union announced in New York that Lewis has no plans whatever to leave that city for Washington today.

Neither did Lewis send any representatives of the United Mine Workers to the board meeting. The labor chief has maintained that the U. M. W. is "packed against unions."

The hearing was scheduled to open at 10 a. m. sharp and counsel for operators were present at that time. After waiting 10 minutes Chairman William H. Davis called the meeting to order and the deliberations began with no union officials present.

The board's hearing, with Lewis absent, now turned out to be an ex-parte proceeding. Under this procedure, the board can conduct a hearing and make finding and then demand that the operators and the miners accept their ruling.

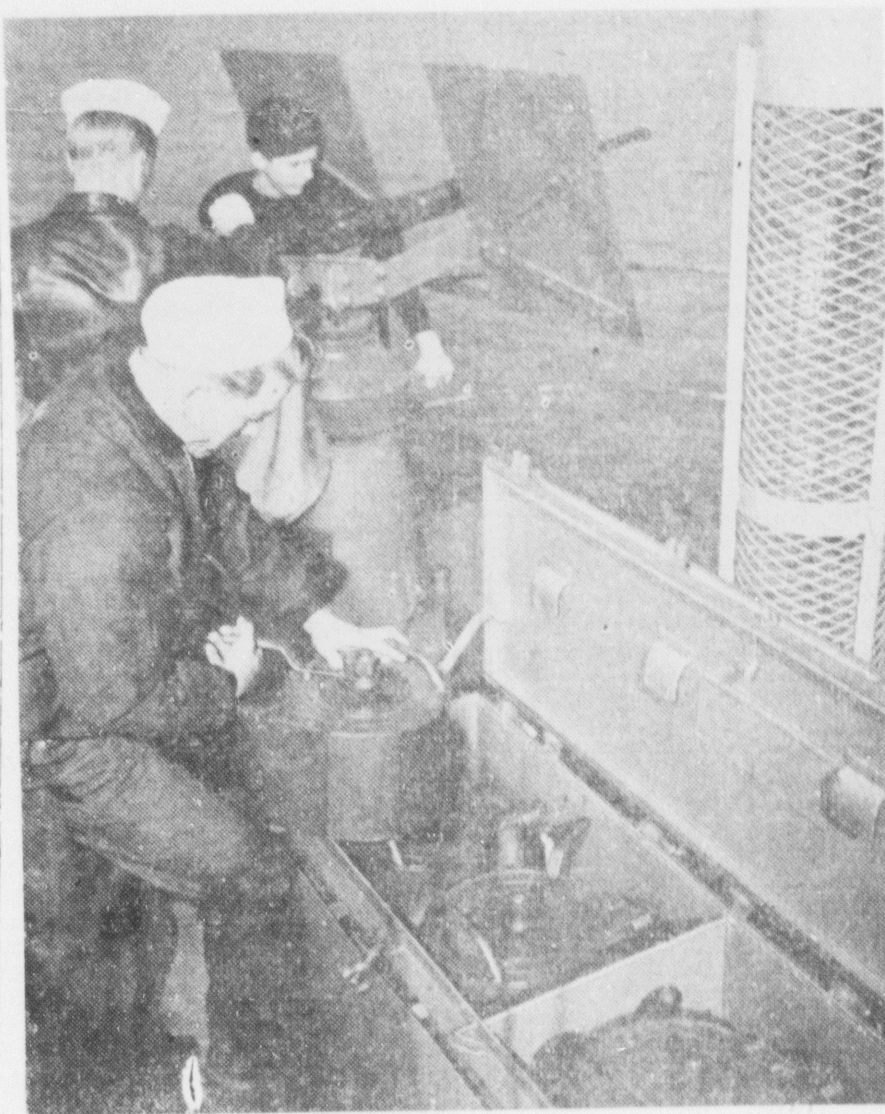

Patton's Troops Advance

Allied Headquarters in North Africa—American troops of Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton's Second Army took over the offensive in the northern sector of Tunisia today, capturing five strategic hills and scoring advances of several miles. Among the objectives which fell to the Americans was Long Stop Hill, only 29 miles southwest of the capital city of Tunis.

This vital promontory has come to be known as the "Verdun" of Tunisia because of the terrific resistance offered by the Germans against countless previous attacks by forces of Lieut. Gen. Kenneth A. N. Anderson's British First Army.

Under cover of a terrific artillery barrage, the Americans gained approximately five miles over exceedingly difficult terrain. A severe Nazi mechanized attack broke down in the face of withering British fire which destroyed at least 16 Panzers. In the Goubellat-Bou Arada area, the determined Allied thrust now has reached approximately to the center of Lake Sabkret El Kounza, where an armored unit on the northern shore swung suddenly to the south and destroyed an entire Nazi motorized column.

Below Bou Arada, the French are harassing the Axis and while along the southern front the hard-bitten veterans of the British Eighth Army are clinging firmly to newly won gains.

EASTER'S LESSON

What is man's duty to his fellow man? This is a query which receives little attention in this age of materialism, but it is a question which must be correctly answered if there is ever to be peace, order and happiness in the world. The whole question of duty is bound up in the Resurrection which the world commemorates on Easter Sunday.

For Christ's triumph over death on the third day after Calvary is the keystone of Christianity. Had there been no Resurrection, Christianity, with its new concept of man's relations with his neighbor, would have been impossible to achieve.

Christ did arise, just as He had said He would. The empty tomb which was discovered on the first Easter morning brought a new fullness, which had been lacking, into man's existence. Man, too, was exalted in a certain sense by the Resurrection. For on that day man acquired a new dignity which had as its prerequisite an entirely new conception of man's duty to his fellow man.

In the bright light of Christ's Resurrection it was no longer possible for some men to regard other men as their inferiors, as slaves. In the sight of One who had suffered and died for all, all men were equal. And thus the world received a foundation on which to base a democratic form of government. Thus, too, the lot of woman was immeasurably dignified. Before the first Easter, women had been regarded as chattels. Afterwards, women became part-takers in the future resurrection which was promised to all who could live upright lives.

As a consequence, the scope of man's duty was enlarged and ennobled. There emerged a new criterion to be applied to all human actions. Christ's Resurrection spelled the doom of ruthless exploitation of men in whatever form it might take. Only slowly has man become aware of this new obligation. Only slowly has he progressed to the point where now it seems that he may once and for all defeat those base men, pagans all, who want to shackle him to a rapacious, soul-destroying totalitarian government.

Easter teaches that man has a duty to his fellow man. And he must perform that duty, else the Resurrection was in vain.

BILLIONS OF VEGETABLES

No attempt has been made to estimate the number of radishes, tomatoes, heads of lettuce, carrots, beets and what have you that will be produced by the nation's Victory gardeners. But it will total in the billions.

The Victory garden campaign has been launched most auspiciously with municipal action in many cities to aid in the obtaining of plots and in plowing them.

Most Victory gardens are miniature entrants in the food war, so small in fact that personal attention lacking in farming on a big scale will be possible, and it would not be surprising if, come fall, there are reports of records for vegetable size being broken in many categories.

Pictures of Italians surrendering have ceased to have news value.

Some old-timers can remember when bootleggers sold nothing but booze.

If Rommel is now in Italy, as reported, it's a good guess that he does his eating where the Italians cannot see him.

However, I locked myself into the cabin. Then, instead of going to bed immediately, I opened my portable typewriter and wrote a letter to the police in San Francisco, together with descriptions of each and every one of the colonists—the list to go with the fingerprints if Komako could get them.

I put them in an envelope, then sat there thinking over the day's developments. Finally, to clear my mind, I put a fresh sheet into the typewriter and began setting down evidence, clues, suspicions, everything that had to do with Elaine.

Out of the deep absorption of this task I became conscious that the sampan was rocking slightly. Someone was coming aboard. I stopped typing and listened acutely. It was not Komako returning, for the movements above my head were cautious and stealthy. I was thankful enough I had locked my stout cabin door.

I stood there, my scalp prickling, straining my ears, waiting for the sound of steps on the companionway. But a deep silence ensued.

Then I heard the faint splash of a paddle in the water. I doused my light and got up on a bunk to look out the porthole.

Through the porthole I could see a canoe slipping across the dark water, moving toward the shore—and towing my dinghy. I didn't need to cast a beam from my flashlight on the paddler to know who it was: Herb, of course. It was his way of locking me up—as if I couldn't swim. Stupid!

Then a thought struck through my impatience. Was this just another piece of Herb's officiousness? Or wasn't he exhibiting more determination than any of the others to lay the blame of the murders on me—to keep the spotlight off himself? Undoubtedly, as I thought back over all the encounters, he was yelling the loudest for my blood.

Very thoughtfully I lighted the gimbal lamp again and returned to my typewriter. I set down every suspicion we had against Herb, culminating in Mrs. Latham's story of seeing him with a spear—my spear!—around the time of Delmar's murder. I made the same kind of report for every other member of the colony, meager though the evidence was.

That made me feel obscurely better, though Elaine was still nagging the back of my mind. I mixed myself a nightcap and left the bottle of whiskey sitting on the shelf above the typewriter, as well as leaving my notes still in the machine. I was that sleepy.

Komako awakened me, some time after sunup. I unlocked the door to let him in. He was noisy, hungry, and seemingly none the worse for the "wake." He flourished a paper at me and boomed:

"Everybody up early, so I get fingerprints fine. See? One by each name. Elaine asleep yet, but doctor go in and get fingerprint for me."

"Didn't you have any trouble about it?" I asked, amazed.

Komako twinkled at me. "Oh, at first they all disgust, and Budd say

Who Is Rubinoff?
To Give Concert Here

Who is Rubinoff? Ask the lobsterman in Maine or the orange grower in Florida. Ring a doorbell in Waukegan or call a farmer to any roadside fence in Nebraska. Manhattan's "troglydote" (*Webster knows) will be no more prompt in his answer than the slow-spoken Creole in New Orleans. They may not, any of them, know his first name (did you know it? It's Dave) but they all know Rubinoff!

Rubinoff will present a concert on Tuesday evening in Bristol high school auditorium under auspices of the Bristol Rotary Club, with the amount cleared by the club being turned over to the Red Cross.

The wide acclaim Rubinoff enjoys is, of course, a direct measure of his wide appeal. What is the Rubinoff formula? Briefly, this—a rich symphonic interpretation of popular music. Unique Rubinoff arrangements. And always the silken magic of his violin. He has rallied under his banner all lovers of music (insufferable high-brows and impossible low-brows excepted). He has come to be known as "Everybody's Artist"—a sobriquet that pleases him mightily. As well it should. For here is a man who, in person, has captivated crowds for 25 years. Here is a man whose artistry has delighted millions.

—virtually the entire radio audience, in more than 47,000 individual station broadcasts in seven years.

Who is Rubinoff, indeed? Ask rather, who is the man who doesn't know? As closely associated in the lay mind as Whittington and his cat or Crusoe and his man Friday, are Rubinoff and his violin. No theatrical partnership of the past—Sothern & Mariowe, Weber & Fields, Montgomery & Stone—was better known in its day. And none was as widely known throughout the country.

One member of this partnership was created over 290 years ago, in Italy; the other was born 40 years ago, in Russia. Today, the adventurous careers of both are united.

Fingers that first fumbled over the frets of a $1.75 fiddle now encircle with a master's touch the strings of a $100,000 Stradivarius. The liquid, melting notes that float from this instrument, because of its matchless quality and the genius of its owner, penetrate deeper than the physical ear.

Hearts, as well as radios, are tuned to receive its music. Wonder and delight are here in full measure. For a violin's magic is an eternal magic. Eastern potentates use it to soothe the heart. Einstein, master of the purest science, turns to his violin for relaxation. Violin concert masters can fuse vast audiences into a single voice of warm tribute, deeper and more sincere than oratory has ever aroused. None knows these truths better than Rubinoff. None is better able to put them into practice than Rubinoff—and his famous violin.

SPORTS ODDITIES

(This article is the eighth of a series covering unusual plays on the diamond. These baseball oddities will be described by outstanding figures in the national pastime.)

By Art Fletcher

(Coach, New York Yankees)
As told to Sid Mercer
(I. N. S. Sports Writer)

NEW YORK, Apr. 24.—Freakiest play I ever saw happened in Boston back in 1914 when we were battling the Braves for a pennant we lost after winning three in a row.

It wasn't funny at the moment but it is now. The score was tied in a late inning when Larry Doyle went to bat. George Burns was a runner on third base and only one was out.

Doyle hit a rather high fly to right field but deep enough to insure Burns scoring. George was a fast man. He did, as a matter of fact, score, but was called out for Doyle's interference.

Here's what happened: As Doyle rounded first base at full speed the ball dropped into the outfielder's glove, and he heaved it toward the

BULL BRINGS HIGH PRICE

DELAWARE, O.—(INS).—The highest price given for a Guernsey bull in New Jersey in the last 20 years, was paid by L. Com. William Kline of Windale Farms near Galena. He purchased a pure-bred Guernsey bull, "Coronation Leader," from Fairlawn Farm, Adelphia, N. J., for $15,000.

to gain positions six to seven miles north of Enfidaville, captured anchor of the Afrika Korps' mountain defenses.

As the Allied ground units moved forward slowly against the fierce enemy resistance American and British aircraft hammered repeatedly at troop concentrations behind the front and loosed damaging new blows against the Axis lines of communication.

In the Pacific American forces tightened their grip on ocean supply lines for new blows against the Japs while Gen. Douglas MacArthur's airmen maintained their bombing assaults on Nipponese island positions north of Australia.

A B-24 Liberator bomber left an 8,000-ton Jap merchant ship aflame and in a sinking condition off Kavieng, New Ireland. The ship, southbound under escort of three destroyers, was smashed amidships by a direct hit with a 500-pound bomb.

Lae, Finschhafen and the Sador area of New Guinea were pounded by Allied fliers along with island bases in the Arafura Sea.

Allied ground patrols operating below the large enemy base at Salamaua, northeast New Guinea, annihilated a Jap outpost of 20 men in a surprise raid in the Komiatum sector. The enemy troops were caught off guard only six air miles from the Salamaua base.

Occupation by United States Marines of Funafuti Island in the Ellice group, between the Fijis and the Jap-held Gilberts to the north, was seen in Washington as an American move to plug loopholes in its Pacific supply line defenses and prepare for expansion of assaults on the Japs.

Russia announced the cessation of German assaults in the Kuban Valley of the west Caucasus where the Nazis have spent the blood of thousands of their troops in an effort to hold back Soviet forces pressing close to the naval base of Novorossiisk.

The Germans broke off their engagements after suffering terrific losses in men and equipment but the Soviet Air Force ranged over their lines to carry further destruction to the enemy.

Only minor action was reported at other points along the vast Russian front.

Air activity in Europe ebbed with only a single Nazi raider bombing a large town in the English west midlands during the night. London had a brief alert but no incidents were reported.

Prime Minister Winston Churchill, indignant over the slaying of American fliers by Japan, promised for Britain that the Royal Air Force as soon as possible would fly side by side with United States pilots in devastating assaults on the Nipponese islands.
